Abstract:

The abstract must appropriately reflect the content of the paper; brief introduction of the problem, purpose/aim of research/paper, research method/s and major findings/conclusions.

Keywords:

Include 4-6 important keywords. Consider what would be the keywords would use in order to find paper.

Main text:

Structure of the paper-Introduction, Literature Review, Methodology, Findings and Discussions and Conclusion & Recommendations.

1. Introduction

The introduction is a description of the problem addressed by the research paper. Define the question and topic that address in the paper. Establish the objective of paper in order to set the direction for the rest of the paper

2. Literature Review and Hypothesis development

Literature review should critically summarize existing theories and empirical studies relevant to the research topic, highlighting key findings, debates, and methodological approaches. It should identify gaps, inconsistencies, or unresolved questions in the literature that justify the need for the current study.

3. Methodology

The methods should be described in a way that another researcher can replicate the study under comparable conditions.

4. Results and discussion

This section is a logical and orderly presentation of the collected data. Confine remarks to the objective findings; leave out subjective or speculative remarks. Consider carefully how to display findings using tables, figures, graphs, and charts.

Discussion

Restate the problem and briefly summaries the methodology and findings. Draw conclusions that are based upon data, and confirm or reject the hypothesis(es), if stated. Discuss the generalization of the study and state its limitation(s).

5. Conclusion and Policy Recommendations

Here point out the paper's major contribution (avoid an extensive summary of the content of the paper), and perhaps indicate interesting areas of research related to the paper's topic that have not been addressed but deserve future investigations. Also, the section may include final recommendations based on the findings of research.
